June of being accessory to the murder of Susanna Hanson in Brookfield in November, 1874. A suit for breach of promise had been begun against him by the woman, and after the discovery of the murder he was arrested, tried in 1875 and acquitted. He was re-arrested three years later as accessory before the fact, a boy named Cook confessing to being the principal and implicating Buzzell, who was again tried in June, 1878, found gullty and sentenced to be hanged July 10. 1879. This sentence was to day carried out, not-withstanding that his counsel and others had made strenuous efforts to secure a commutation.
